Introduction

This guide is a cycling atlas of Sardinia, designed for those who want to travel the island along the asphalted roads. Sardinia offers the possibility to cycle almost on all its roads. The absence of traffic celebrates the sounds of nature and enhances the relationship with the landscape. This guide describes, accompanied by the road book, five itineraries divided into twenty-four stages, with an average of 100 km. Rest stops are indicated at mid-way. Each stage and rest stop has hotels, agritourisms and B&B.

The five itineraries link in a centre point, which permits to the cyclist to create a tailored tour, linking different stages of different itineraries. For example, those arriving by boat or by plane in the north can, linking different stages of different itineraries, reach the south of the island and leave again.

This guide gives some basic information on the organisation of the tour, but refers to websites and classical tourist guides for more in-depth information on archaeological, cultural and natural interesting sites, on accommodation and the refreshment places along the way.

Climate

The ideal months to cycle in Sardinia are from March to June and from September to December.

Also the two coldest months – January and February – offer reasonable conditions for cyclists; the only area where one could encounter some snow is on the Gennargentu massif, high in the centre of Sardinia.

It is possible to cycle also in July and August, but remember to avoid the hottest hours of the day and don't forget to drink frequently. In fact, during these months temperatures during the day can achieve 40° C.

Morphology of Sardinia

Sardinia is an Island in the Mediterranean sea with an area of 24.040 km², 270 km of length and 145 km of width. It is bigger than Corsica and smaller than Sicily. The island is an ancient land, marked by different geological eras which have characterized its landscapes making them extremely varied and morphologically different. Its inland is mainly hilly, among its mountains, the central massif of the Gennargentu stands out, and it culminates with the peak Punta La Marmora (1834 m). In the south west part of the Island the huge plain of the Campidano goes from Cagliari to Oristano, dividing the mountain groups of the Iglesiente and Sulcis areas. The granitic massif of the Sulcis area is isolated from other formations and it is not unusual for it to reach 1000 m of height. In the South-Centre, between the mountain ridges and the Campidano area, there is a hilly area with landscapes of soft undulations, in which we can find the typical Giare (basalt plateaus), of which the main one is that of Gesturi (between 500 and 600 m of height). In the West-Centre, in the plain of the Oristano area there are the Monte Arci (812 m) and the Monte Ferru (1.050 m), which join the central massifs determining the geographical division of the island in Capo di Sopra or Capo di Sassari (upper side) and Capo di Sotto or Capo di Cagliari (lower side). In the North-West, the volcanic formations occupy the vast majority of the territory. In fact, the Logudoro area presents remarkable traces of its volcanic past with small hills which emerge from the plain with sharp profiles. The volcanic landscape extends up to the North-West, while towards Alghero it gives space to a huge plain which overlooks the sea with striking calcareous promontories. In the North-East, the granite relief of the Gallura area has distinctive profiles carved by the wind through time, the highest, Monte Limbara, reaches 1.362 m of height. In the Southern part of the Gallura area, the granite has mountainous features with huge ridges, in a crescendo towards the peaks of the Barbagia area. In the Centre-East, around the gulf of Orosei, the dolomitic limestone formations prevail and they form the so called "Supramontes", characterized by dizzy, bare and whitish walls which give the landscape a lunar aspect. The Karst phenomenon created several grottoes and dolines (such as that of Tiscali). In the South-East we can find tacchi and tonneri, which are typical calcareous formations, sometimes shaly, which characterize the land between the Flumendosa river and the Southern border of the Ogliastra area. In the mountain group of the Sette Fratelli, in the South, we can find the granite again.

The roads

The routes use roads with a little traffic. In fact, Sardinia is sparsely populated; the habitative density is about 67 inhabitants per km² compared to the Italian average, which is 189 inhabitants per km².

The population and the traffic are concentrated in the region of Cagliari and around the more populated towns. The quality of the road surface is good and the roads are large enough to allow vehicles to overtake easily. Car drivers respect cyclists and the sound of the horn is to say “hello”, to let you know that they are passing.

The routes

The five routes proposed have been created based on the beauty of the places. The 24 stages which form them have been oriented according to the prevailing wind of the island, the Mistral which blows from North-West. For each stage there are road books which describe the route, road maps, the altitude profile and some info about the main interesting sites along the route.

The level of difficulty of the stage can be:

Easy – The ground is mainly level, with drops up to 700 m per 100 km

Medium – The ground is moderately hilly, with drops up to 1.200 m per 100 km

Demanding – Hilly ground, with drops up to 1.700 m per 100 km

Hard - Mountainous ground, with drops exceeding 1.700 m per 100 km

The road book indicates the points to enter and leave the towns and the direction to follow to cross them.

The following symbols are used in the road books to explain the directions:

- | | |
|----------------------|----------------------------|
| ▲ Start of the stage | ↶ Go on keeping the left |
| ▽ End of the stage | → Turn right |
| ↑ Go straight | ↗ Go on keeping the right |
